other direction.

Illinoian and Memphis, Tennessee, are all in danger of being washed into the river.
The papers in each of the places named have sounded the alarm. Cairo has less to fear than any other river city. Her grand levees secure her against the dangers of flood and assaults of the currents of the rivers that flow by her, are all in vain.

PEEPING JERRY.

How he indulged his propensity to peep, and How he got into trouble and the "calashouse."Mr. J. Howard agrees with a lady writer in The Galaxy that American ladies are not "scrappy," and that a handsome leg in this country is not a rarity. He believes, on the contrary, that their pretty feet suggest perfect symmetry in the fair forms that terminate so well; and, being in Cairo, he came to the conclusion that he might, without great difficulty, test the correctness of his impressions on this very important subject.
He therefore determined to see for himself; and, during several days, took up his position under the high side walk, where, unseen, he endeavored to catch a glimpse of the pretty ankles that passed over his head.
At last he became overbold; and, seeing an ankle that delighted his vision by its perfections, stretched forth his arm and grasped it with his hand. Can we describe the terror of the lady? Need we say she made the neighborhood vocal with her exclamations of affright?
If our male reader will only imagine what her sensations would be if he were a woman, and while walking along the sidewalk should have his leg grasped by a strange and rude fellow, there will be no occasion to inform him that the lady in question was shocked—terrified.
In response to her cries, officers came rushing from all parts of the city; and (into how many difficulties curiosity leads us!) Mr. Jerry Howard was arrested.
He was promptly dragged into the presence of the good-natured but stern and inexorable Police Magistrate Gross, who holds the scales of Justice with great steadiness; and there he was charged with the crime of being Peeping Jerry. The Judge listened to the evidence with great patience; and then asked the prisoner why he, an elderly man, had been guilty of such conduct. In answer, the prisoner said he was an orphan, and had nobody to take care of him. Difficultly was the legacy his father left him. The Judge replied: "The leg, I see, has got you into difficulty, and I must assess a fine against you of $40 and costs. Our Court, policeman, being a stout policeman, gobbled the orphan, and put him in the jail, under the care of Bill McHale.

A WHISKER-PULLING DAMSEL.

"And darst thou then To bear the lion in his den?"There are two facts worthy the profound consideration of all men and women, too!FIRST FACT: That a comely bearded soldier is bearded like the bard; and the beard of formal cut is even more a feature of the conventional Justice than his "fair round belly and good capon lined." Whiskers are, in short, so to speak, the right boots.

SECOND FACT: That hell has no fury like a termagant woman.

Now, it is known that officer — — — is the lucky possessor of a beard as comely as ever wagged in merry hall. It hangs, we have no doubt, upon his breast in the same way that Aaron's did on his.We refer to Old Aaron who helped the
